POVERTY IS SOLVABLE — it is a problem rooted in injustice. Eliminate injustice and you can eliminate poverty. It will not be quick or easy, but it can be done. Together, let's do what's right.

EMPOWERING SMALLHOLDER FARMERS TO MAKE FOOD FAIR

"I am from a backward caste. My father and mother in law don't like me because of that. They always wanted to expel me from the family. I don't have any job, I don't own any land, and I am poor."
— Suresho Aina, 39, a smallholder farmer in Uttar Pradesh, India.

What's wrong?

Women smallholder farmers in Uttar Pradesh make up 38 per cent of the total agricultural workforce. Due to traditional values and gender inequality, they are not recognised by men, by society, and by the government as farmers. As a result, they have very limited access to resources, government schemes and programmes, and micro credit. Worse still, most women farmers do not have access to or control over land, which seriously hinders their productivity and income. According to a study conducted by Oxfam, only six per cent of women in Uttar Pradesh own land, less than one per cent participate in government training programmes, and only eight per cent have control over agricultural income.

WHAT'S OXFAM DOING?

Oxfam is supporting women smallholder farmers in India to improve their yields and income by setting up 375 women groups (40 women per group) at the village level. Agricultural training and support are also provided.

To tackle the root causes of the problem, we support women smallholder farmers like Suresho Aina to fight for their land rights and make their voices heard through the AAROH Campaign. This is a campaign led by women farmers that aims to change land laws through advocacy and lobbying the Indian government; 15,000 women are involved in the campaign.

Standing together with women farmers against injustice.

SMALLHOLDER FARMERS ARE PEOPLE WHO:

- Own small plots of land on which they grow subsistence crops and one or two cash crops relying almost exclusively on family labour.
- Produce food for us and represent the majority of the poorest and hungriest people on earth.
- Mostly reside in the suburbs of developing countries. Nearly 90 per cent of the world's 600 million farmers are smallholder farmers.

How to achieve the goal?

- 1 Organising women into women farmers groups
- 2 Lobbying the government to change land laws
- 3 Campaigns to change social attitude
- 4 Building up the network and capacity of civil societies, lawyers and others

"We are the Qiang people (an ethnic group) in Beichuan, Sichuan, China. I grow vegetables and work as a day labourer for an income. I am a member of the village development committee. I mobilised other women in the village to help build a road which is important for our livelihood development. In the beginning, villagers – particularly the village head – were sceptical about women's ability to lead the project, but we showed them that we could do it. The village now recognises our contribution!" – He Qiong

What's wrong?

Decades of environmental degradation, natural disaster, poor transportation, and limited government resources have crippled the development of smallholder farmers' livelihoods in Beichuan, Sichuan Province, China. Women villagers tend to have fewer resources, and fewer opportunities to make life-shaping decisions than men due to traditional values.

WHAT'S OXFAM DOING?

We recognise people's power to change their lives. That is why we are working with a partner organisation in Beichuan to support farmers there to improve their lives and mobilise government resources to develop the community. Through it, we encourage women to take part in community development, and make sure that their voices are heard. Villagers involved in the project also make decisions as a group and share the workload. Currently, we are:

BUILDING STORM DRAINS

Beichuan County is a disaster-prone area; heavy rains during flood season can easily destroy crops. That is why we work with farmers to build storm drains to drain floodwater, and protect their livelihoods and lives.

SUPPORTING ORGANIC FARMING

Supporting farmers to convert to organic farming to rehabilitate the soil. Farmers have learnt how to make organic fertiliser using pig and chicken manure, clear weeds without damaging the soil, and control pests. Some farmers have increased their income by growing organic vegetables.

BUILDING ROADS

Many villages in Beichuan are built on high mountains and deep valleys. Poor transportation and communication networks have made it difficult for villagers to escape poverty. The roads built with Oxfam's support, however, have reduced the time and cost farmers need to spend on transporting their grain and vegetables to the market to sell.

LIFE AFTER EBOLA OXFAM IN SIERRA LEONE AND LIBERIA

Oxfam provides clean water, toilets and hygiene classes to children in Port Loko's Educaid Primary School in Sierra Leone. The country was one of the most affected by the Ebola disease outbreak.

THE 2014 EBOLA OUTBREAK

The 2014 Ebola outbreak in West Africa is the most severe in recorded history in terms of the number of human cases and deaths; the average survival rate is around 50 per cent.

OXFAM RESPONSE

Oxfam has been operating in West Africa since the 1990s. We immediately scaled up our emergency programmes in response to the outbreak. Oxfam worked in six countries, including Sierra Leone, Liberia, Mali, Senegal, Gambia and Guinea Bissau, to prevent the spread of Ebola both by improving access to water, cleaning equipment and protective clothing, and by talking with communities about Ebola and offering them support and information to try to prevent further infections.

HOW CAN YOU GET EBOLA VIRUS?

1. Direct contact with body fluids of a person who is sick or died from Ebola
2. From objects contaminated with the virus
3. By infected animals through direct contact with blood fluids or meat

PREVENTION:

Avoiding direct contact with body fluids of infected people

Regular hand washing using soap and water

Avoiding direct contact with fruit bats

Wearing of protective clothing

Cremating bodies of deceased people

We have provided over 1.4 MILLION people with:

Water and sanitation

Ebola prevention and education

Hygiene kits

Livelihoods development

RESTORING LIVELIHOODS

Aminata, 26, and her mother Hawa, 65, are farmers in Katumbo, Sierra Leone. During the Ebola crisis, the government restricted community members' movement between villages and towns. This had a devastating impact on the livelihoods of smallholder farmers and petty traders who depended on selling their produce at markets. Aminata said, 'Normally, I sell my carrots to the capital in Freetown and other places, but during the Ebola crisis, the markets were almost down, and there were roadblocks. So, I couldn't get people to buy my vegetables and I had no income.'

After the restrictions began to be lifted, Oxfam worked with communities to rebuild their businesses and redevelop their farmlands by providing cash grants. Farmers used the cash grants to buy seeds and tools for farming, and stock for their stalls. Aminata said, 'I received $68 pounds (about HK$750) from Oxfam, I used the money to start farming again and expand my farm. I was happy, my children and my mother were happy because I could start doing some small trading business and my kids could get food and go to school.'

2. Oxfam works with Behyepea community members in Tappita district, Liberia, so that families have the support they need to get back on their feet after the Ebola crisis.

WATER AND SANITATION, AND PUBLIC HEALTH

Oxfam is widely known for delivering high-quality public health programmes to achieve maximum impact on the health and well-being of communities affected by emergencies. During the Ebola outbreak, Oxfam's Water, Sanitation and Hygiene (WASH) teams worked with communities to create an environment in which public health risks were reduced and the safety and dignity of emergency-affected communities was enhanced

Oxfam provides clean water, toilets, showers and hygiene classes to 600 students aged 12 to 23 in Port Loko's EducAid High School, Sierra Leone.

"TIGERS" IN THE TOILETS

The tiger worm toilet is an economically and environmentally sustainable alternative to the commonly used pit latrine. It addresses the issue of pits frequently filling up in congested places, and where digging into the ground is difficult. The toilets give communities the chance to lead happier, healthier, and more dignified lives. The worms can digest the contents of the toilet; this accelerates the decomposition of faeces, stops germs from spreading, reduces the volume of waste inside and helps the toilets to last longer. What's more, the worms turn the waste into a fantastic natural fertiliser!

Patricia lives in Doe community in downtown Monrovia, Liberia. She has had an Oxfam Tiger worm toilet for three years now and uses the fertiliser it produces to grow vegetables for her and her family to eat.

Sallieu Kargbo, 22
Hygiene teacher,
EcuAid Primary School
Port Loko, Sierra Leone

'I'm in charge of the hygiene club in the school. Some of the kids here have lost their fathers and mothers during the Ebola crisis. They long for an education. I work with club members to make sure that our environment is clean. We keep all latrines and bathrooms clean. We meet three times per week to make sure everyone knows the importance of hygiene. Members of the club help me spread the message to everybody in the school. We thank Oxfam for building the latrines which are essential for improving hygiene in our environment, and they also provided hand washing buckets, soap, shovel, and gloves.'

WASTE MANAGEMENT

Oxfam has initiated a project working with local youth groups to facilitate daily rubbish collection. Volunteers go door to door to collect household waste from their communities, and take it to dump sites for proper disposal. Prior to this project, there was no formal rubbish collection in the Pa Morlai Community, Sierra Leone. As a result, waste littered the streets, making the environment unsanitary. Since the project, there has been a remarkable decrease in the amount of litter in the street.

COMMUNITY ENGAGEMENT

The word 'Ebola' is often linked to fear, stigma, mistrust and rumours both in affected communities and around the world. As such, community engagement has been widely recognised as a critical component in the response to Ebola. That is why Oxfam trained hundreds of volunteers that went door to door to change the behaviours that were putting the population at risk. They also encouraged people to come forward to get tested for Ebola.

Florence Sessay, 24
Member of the Care Model Group,
Cabala Town, Freetown, Sierra Leone

'The workshops were led by women in the community. Through the workshop, we had learnt about the disease and sanitation, how to take care of children when they are sick and what measures to take to prevent the spread of the Ebola virus: drinking clean water, washing hands before eating and covering food to prevent contamination. Group members meet two times per month. I visit and teach other people how to take care of their health. I feel glad about Oxfam because they teach us a lot.'

Photos: Tommy Trenchard/Oxfam

'One of the things I like most is Oxfam's involvement with the women. Women represent a crucial section of society that have long been forgotten. If we deny them the opportunities to reach their full potential, we are just being mean to ourselves. When women are empowered they can speak out on the issues concerning them, their communities, their counties, and even the country in general.'

Asa Dichon
Oxfam Project Officer
Graie community, Tappita district, Liberia

WOMEN EMPOWERMENT

A women's savings group in Liberia.

Oxfam supported women in Sierra Leone and Liberia to set up women's groups, and training was provided. We seek to strengthen the capacity of women's networks to raise awareness of women's land rights, and advocate for greater participation among women in the decision-making process on property ownership. We also promote local governance through female political empowerment.

THE CRISIS IS OVER, BUT EBOLA COULD STRIKE AGAIN

Ebola-affected countries in West Africa have some of the worst water, sanitation and hygiene (WASH) infrastructure in the world. To prevent the disease from striking again, we need to strengthen public health services, including WASH in schools and slum areas, and more broadly to make access to clean water and sanitation available and sustainable in communities.

We at Oxfam have been supporting governments and communities in Sierra Leone and Liberia to return to normal, as well as communities to protect against Ebola. With the need to rebuild livelihoods and health services, we will continue work in the affected countries for the long-haul.

Over 680,000 Rohingya people have fled violence in Myanmar to seek refuge across the border in Bangladesh. This unprecedented number of refugees, of whom more than half are children, has caused a large-scale humanitarian crisis.

TACKLING THE ROOT CAUSES OF THE CRISIS

We are calling for the international community, especially the United Nations and world leaders, to tackle the root causes of this crisis. We are also calling on the Myanmar authorities to act to end the violence and live up to their commitment to fully implement the recommendations of the Kofi Annan-led Rakhine Commission report, including ensuring that all people in Myanmar have equal rights. Independent investigations into human rights violations are essential, with those responsible brought to justice, as well as compensation for lost land.

HOW CAN WE LIVE UP TO THE EXPECTATION OF OUR SUPPORTERS AND DONORS?

By: Chan Mayling, International Programme Director, Oxfam Hong Kong

I remember when I first joined Oxfam in the early 90s, it was quite unheard of to set a gender policy which attended to sexual harassment in the workplace. In the 2000s, we established a whistleblowing policy which enabled victims of sexual exploitation to come forward to report abuse.

So long as the unbalance of power between men and women exist, poverty and injustice will prevail. That is why women empowerment is at the core of our development and humanitarian programmes. We implement programmes on women's economic empowerment (WEE) within value chains across the globe. We make sure women's voices are heard. We support them to take leadership roles in their communities.

The Haiti scandal did pose a challenge to us. As an organisation, we excel in some areas and have positively impacted countless people's lives, but we have also failed in some areas due to the discrepancy in values we hold as individuals. That said, we are doing all we can to step up our safeguarding measures to ensure that vulnerable people are protected, not wronged by Oxfam.

With your support, we will emerge better from our current situation and empower even more people in poor communities to improve their lives.

OXFAM RICE CAN HELP!

Around the globe, Oxfam works to find practical, innovative ways for smallholder farmers to lift themselves out of poverty and thrive. Now, you can show your support! A small bag of Oxfam Rice can help them build a better future for their families.

On Earth, there is a small but beautiful village called Damei Village. Villagers there are subsistence farmers. One day, AB Company came to acquire the land of Damei Village and asked the villagers to relocate. ## MEET OUR LOCAL PARTNER ORGANISATION: GREEN FUTURE 'FOOD WASTE RECOVERY' PARENT-CHILD WORKSHOP

There are 800 million people in the world living in hunger, however, one-third of the food produced globally every year is wasted; as this food breaks down, it emits greenhouse gases, which further fuels climate change. There is growing evidence that climate change significantly impacts the poor.

Green Future was established in 2012 and first worked with Oxfam in Macau in 2016. The objective of this workshop is to help participants understand the relationship between climate change and poverty through the production of fruit jam and enzyme cleaners using surplus food and food waste.
